IR406 Gender Justice and War

Introduction

'Gender' does not mean 'women', it refers to the ways in which human beings are classified as either male or female (even though this is not always biologically straightforward) and the association of these categories with particular subjective identities as well as social norms and expectations of masculinity and femininity. Gender can be explained or understood in a variety of ways, for example in ways which rely on biological, psycho-analytical, psychological, social or linguistic accounts of what it means to be gendered as a human being. But however it is defined and explained, gender has always been relevant to understanding and judging war. Over the past twenty years there have been a variety of developments in the theory and practice of war and peace which have brought the issue of gender centre stage. These range from the increasing involvement of women in the military, to the growth of feminist peace movements, to the so-called 'feminisation' of modern warfare, to the explicit inclusion of rape in the category of crimes against humanity. This is therefore a particularly interesting time to explore explanatory and normative questions about the mutual interrelation of gender and war.

Aims

A large literature has accumulated around the topics of gender and international relations and, in particular, of gender, war and peace since the 1980s. This course is designed to introduce students to some of the key themes in this literature. We will be exploring the following explanatory and normative questions: to what extent do gendered relations of power contribute to sustaining and reproducing war as a political, social and economic phenomenon? In what sense does gender figure in the causes and consequences of war? What are the implications of a gender perspective for normative judgements about war and peace? The key aim of the course is to enable students to understand and assess different answers to these questions, and to formulate and be able to defend their own responses.

Objectives

By the end of the course, students should:

- 1. Be able to understand and assess different theories of gender and the relations and distinctions between sex and gender, masculinity and femininity.
- 2. Be able to understand and assess the contributions of feminist theorists to the explanatory and normative judgment of international relations, war and peace.
- 3. Possess knowledge of substantive empirical material relating to a variety of topics: eg., women and homosexuals in the military; the role of sexual violence in war; gender and national identity; gender and transitional justice; gender and international law; gender, peace-keeping and peace-making; and women's peace movements.
- 4. Be able to apply theoretical understanding to the judgment of empirical cases.

Teaching Methods

This course is taught in a 2 hour seminar format. Seminars begin in Week 1, Michaelmas Term and are held weekly throughout Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and in the first week of Summer Term. Seminars are intended as a forum for students to discuss specific questions in relation to specific readings. At the end of each seminar, students will be given a set of notes providing an overview and guidance on reading and questions for the following week's topic. Students are expected to prepare thoroughly for seminars by reading at least three of the key readings and thinking about the questions beforehand. For each seminar after the second meeting, one student will be nominated to introduce the discussion in the following week. The purpose of the introduction will be to frame the class debate by identifying key questions/ problems of interest in the literature for general discussion. All students will be expected to contribute to discussion in any given week. In addition, four seminars (Weeks 1-4, Lent Term) have been allocated for formal presentations (in pairs or groups) on one of the four topics identified below:

- 1. Gender roles in war post 1989: case study
- 2. Gender and National Identity
- 3. Political Violence and Sexual Violence
- 4. Gender and Transitional Justice

Guidance on the format for group presentations is given below.

Course Information

This course outline in addition to seminar notes will also be available electronically through the IR406 public folder.

Course Requirements

Students intending to take formal assessment in this course must also write three essays during the course of the year (maximum length 2,500 words).

Deadline Essay 1: 30th November Deadline Essay 2: 29th February Deadline Essay 3: 2nd Mav

Producing these essays is vital preparation for the end of year examination. Titles for essays can be taken from the seminar questions, from the sample examination papers (below) or negotiated with the tutor.

Course Assessment

One unseen 3 hour examination in the summer term, requiring 3 questions to be answered, at least one from each of the two sections (see sample papers below)

Guidelines on Presentations Weeks 1-4 Lent Term

- 1. Gender roles in wars post 1989: case study
- 2. Gender and National Identity
- 3. Political Violence and Sexual Violence
- 4. Gender and Transitional Justice

The purpose of these presentations is to give students the opportunity to work with each other to research a particular theme or set of questions in detail. Students can come to their own decisions on what they would like to concentrate on within the specified theme. The aim should be to construct a presentation of not more than 45 minutes, allowing the rest of the seminar for questions, discussion and debate. These seminars will be entirely organised by the students in question, including managing the discussion period. Here are some points to bear in mind:

1. What is a presentation for?

Presentations are intended to facilitate and frame discussion of a topic. They are designed to deepen understanding of topics mapped out in hand-outs. They are not supposed to be repetitions of hand-out material or the equivalent of an essay read out loud. Presentations may take the form of an argument for a particular point of view or a more even handed overview of certain debates.

2. What makes a good presentation?

A good presentation is well researched, clearly structured and engages the attention of its audience. It raises questions, does not simply repeat hand-out material and is not so detailed that the audience are unable to follow. A good presentation leads to a lively discussion. However, presentations also depend for their success on the audience. If non-presenting members of the class have not done any preparation it is difficult for discussion to be stimulated, even if the presentation is a good one.

3. Resources

If you want photocopies for the presentation, you must get the material to Kim two days in advance. If you want OHP transparencies/ pens, or any other facilities then let Kim know in advance.

4. Tips

Don't try to do too much in a presentation. It is often more effective to look at one case study in detail than to try to cover everything relevant to a particular topic. Try and isolate the particular questions and empirical material you are interested in and then focus on that. Students giving presentations should work from notes (don't just read out a text) and address the group as a whole, not just the tutor. Use OHPs, hand-outs or power-point to remind you and your audience of the overall structure of your discussion. In the case of pair or group presentations, division of labour, co-ordination and rehearsal are key. A presentation will not work if each participant has produced an independent speech, participants need to decide on the structure of the presentation as a whole and then decide who does what. Aim for 45 minutes max. and end your presentation with further questions/topics for discussion.

Assessment

The presentations are not formally assessed, but each pair/group will be provided with feedback which will comment on and allocate a grade to:

Seminar Programme and Key Readings¹

Michaelmas Term

Week 2: Key Concepts: Gender and War

Questions: Why is 'gender' not a synonym for women? What is 'war'? How is 'war' changing? Why might gender be relevant to the understanding and judgment of war?

Key Readings

Gender: what differences can you see between Goldstein's and Carver's notions of 'gender'?

Week 4: Waltz and Elshtain: a Critical Comparison

Kenneth Waltz's book Man, the State and War (1958) is a classic in international relations theory and his idea of the '3rd level' of analysis, or structural realism, continues to influence much mainstream work in international relations. Jean Bethke Elshtain's book (1987) Women and War is a classic in feminist work on international relations. The purpose of this session is to deepen understanding of feminist engagements with mainstream IR by looking closely at these two texts and their strengths and weaknesses. Week 5: War and Masculinity

Questions: What does it mean to claim that war is inherently masculine? Is it true that war, or political violence in general, is inherently masculine? What is the distinction between militarized masculinity and masculinity in general?

Key Readings

FURTHER READING

Reading Suggestions for Beginners

This course engages with massive literatures from a range of disciplines and fields, the following are suggestions to get people started who have no background in one or other of the three key literatures from which the course draws: international relations; gender studies and feminist scholarship.

If you have no background in IR, I suggest you read one of the following textbooks for an overview of the field:

J. Baylis & S. Smith (eds) The Globalization of World Politics (Oxford, OUP, 3rd Edition, 2001) JX1395 (intended for undergraduate beginners)

Chris Brown with Kirsten Ainley Understanding International Relations (Basingstoke, Palgrave, 3rd edition 2005) JZ1305 B87 (more sophisticated)

S. Burchill et al Theories of International Relations (Basingstoke, Palgrave, 3rd edition 2005) JX1391 (also more sophisticated and focused solely on theoretical pardigms)

If you have no background in gender theory, I suggest you read the following introduction, Connell, R. W. Gender, Cambridge, Polity, 2002 CC HQ1075 C75

If you have no background in feminist theory, I suggest you read at least one of:

Humm, M. (ed) Feminisms : a reader, New York & London, Harvester Wheatsheaf, 1992 HQ1111 F32;

Tong, R. Feminist Thought: a comprehensive introduction, Boulder CO, Westview, 1989 HQ1206 T66.

Eagleton, M. (ed) A Concise Companion to Feminist Theory, Malden MA & Oxford, Blackwell, 2003. HQ1190 C74

Kim, S-K & McCann, C. (eds) Feminist Theory Reader, New York & London, Routledge, 2002. HQ1190 F47

In addition, the key readings specified for seminars in Weeks 2,3 and 4 should help to build up a suitable background to tackle the rest of the course.

- 10. Do women and men get sexually assaulted in war for the same reasons?
- 11. Does a gender analysis contribute anything to the theory and practice of peace-keeping?
- 12. Can a gender perspective be helpful in explaining and judging the 'war on terror'?

IR406 Examination Paper, June 2004

3 hours

Answer three questions, at least one from Section A and one from Section B.

Section A

- 1. What theories of gender are most useful in explaining the predominant sexual division of labour in war?
- 2. Critically examine the interrelation between war and hegemonic masculinity in the post-cold war period.
- 3. Does successful peace-keeping require a feminisation of military culture?
- 4. Is there a contradiction between feminism and nationalism as political projects?
- 5. Assess feminist critiques of classical just war theory.
- 6. Assess the claim that the theory and practice of peace are gendered.

Section B

- 7. Analyse and assess the use of the notion of 'combat-effectiveness' in contemporary policies concerning women and gays in the military.
- 8. How might the idea of a women only peace movement be justified?
- 9. What kinds of difference would the implementation of UNSCR 1325 make to peace-making or peace building processes?
- 10. "The witnesses almost universally experience the trials as dehumanising and re-traumatizing experiences." (Mertus) Critically examine alternatives to ICTs as ways of delivering justice to the victims of sexual violence in war
- 11. How is sexual violence against men in situations of violent conflict to be explained?
- 12. Critically examine the symbolic role of women in representations of the current war on terror.

IR406 Examination Paper, June 2005

3 hours
