UNIT

In recent years, International Relations (IR) as a discipline has been characterized by extensive and significant theoretical ferment. This unit will provide you with an overview of key theoretical traditions in IR. The goal of this unit is not to get you to adopt a particular IR theory or representation of world politics. Instead, it is hoped that this unit will help you to develop the tools to uncover the assumptions, both tacit and explicit, behind the way in which questions and texts are framed, to consider what questions are left unasked, and to recognize which theories have been, or have not been, used. Overall, the unit is designed better to prepare you as a scholar and as a citizen to understand the workings of world politics through a greater awareness of the diversity of IR theories and their respective strengths and weaknesses.

METHODS

The following methods will be outlined and used in the seminars:

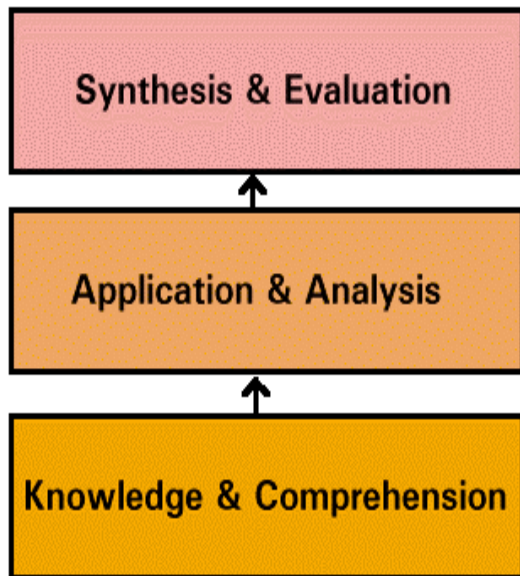

- Listening and speaking in discussion
- Essay writing
- Oral presentation

OBJECTIVES

The objective of this course unit is to help you as citizens and future decision-makers to develop an understanding of the variety of theories which are employed for the analysis of international relations and as a guide for policy makers. The unit will also help you identify your own position and viewpoints within the epistemology and theory of International Relations.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

There are three levels of skill in the study of international relations which you are going to learn and practice in this unit:

When you have completed this unit successfully, you should thus be able to demonstrate orally and in your essay writing that you can:

- PLACE each theory correctly within the 'third debate'.
- EVALUATE the contributions of different theories to our understanding of contemporary international relations.
- APPLY different theoretical approaches to contemporary international relations.
- ANALYSE the merits and limitations of different theoretical approaches.
- DEFINE key concepts in international relations theory.
- EXPLAIN different theories of international relations.

ACTIVE LEARNING

You will enjoy and learn from this unit most, if you:

- Read the core material for seminar and do any required homework!
It is simply no fun having to listen to people talk about things you don't have a clue about.
- Note any questions that you have about your reading and ask them in class!
The seminars are not to test your knowledge, but to help you understand what you have read. If you do not use this opportunity to ask a question you might never know the answer.

REQUIRED WORK

Your learning of the tasks set out in the learning above will be formally and informally assessed through:

- one oral presentation and handout
- one essay due on the Friday of week 12 by 12 noon

1. ASSESSED ESSAY

There are no seminars during weeks 11 and 12 so that you can concentrate on writing your assessed essays. The question for the essay and the oral seminar presentation must be on different topics. Essay questions will be handed out in class when they have been approved by our external examiner.

Full details about all requirements and rules regarding assessed essays – including length, formatting, submission, pass marks, extensions, feedback, resubmissions, and so on – are in the Departmental Graduate Studies Handbook.

2. ORAL PRESENTATION

We will discuss guidelines and criteria for good oral presentations in the first week of term.

3. SELF-REFLECTION

Self-reflection on your learning should be an integral part of your study because you will only learn it you are aware of the gaps in your knowledge/understanding/skills. To encourage this practice, I may ask you to think about and comment (in writing) on your oral presentation.

4. TEACHER FEEDBACK

You will have feedback as follows:

- oral comments during the seminar
- oral and/or written feedback on your presentation
- written feedback on your essay

OFFICE HOURS

My office hours will be announced in the first week of term.

REQUIRED TEXTS FOR PURCHASE

1. Tim Dunne, Milja Kurki and Steve Smith International Relations Theory: Discipline and Diversity Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006. Hereafter [Text]

This is a new textbook that I am trying out for the first time this year. It is replacing John Baylis and Steve Smith, The Globalization of World Politics. An Introduction to International Relations, 3rd edition JZ1305 GLO This is by far and away the best known textbook in the field of international relations, but it is designed for broad-ranging undergraduate courses, whereas Dunne, Kurki and Smith is specifically designed for a course on International Relations Theory. I have placed all the relevant chapters from Baylis and Smith in the section on Strongly Recommended Reading. I hope that you will read some of the chapters because I would like to get your assessment at the end of the unit as to which text you preferred.

2. Course Pack (contains all required reading that is not in the Textbook)

UNIT READINGS

Each week's seminar will proceed on the assumption that you have completed ALL of that week's required reading. The syllabus organizes the required reading in order of difficulty and objective in a way that matches the first two skill levels shown in the diagram 'learning outcomes' above:

Required Text No. 1 ⇒ Learning objective: Knowledge

The first text is usually from a textbook. It introduces you to the theory by summarizing key texts from a number of authors and provides an overview of the debates surrounding it. It is usually the easiest text to read for the week and is best read first.

Required Text No. 2 ⇒ Learning objective: Comprehension

The second text is a book or article by a/the key author who has defined a theory. It explains the details of a theory to you in the author's own words. This is the most important text that you read in the week because it allows you to make up your own mind about a theory. It is usually moderately difficult and is best read second.

Required Text No. 3 ⇒ Learning objective: Application, Analysis, Critique

Further texts either present an application of the theory or an analysis of its merits and limitations. These are frequently the most difficult texts because they introduce you to new skills. It is best to read these texts last.

Reading recommended by previous students: ☺

Other readings

Beyond the required readings, the readings for this unit are divided into two categories: strongly recommended reading and supplementary reading. Those under the heading 'strongly recommended' have been chosen because they offer prominent arguments, are written by prominent authors, and/or are particularly illuminating of the perspective under discussion. You might start with these when you pursue further reading about a given theoretical tradition. Those readings under the heading 'supplementary reading' have been chosen to give you a range of examples of work in, or critical of, the particular theoretical tradition. In each category entries are listed alphabetically.

Short Loan: Items marked with * are in the Short Loan Collection. Note that some items will be in the Short Loan Collection even if they are not marked with an asterisk here, as they may have been put on short loan for another unit. So, if an item does not have an asterisk yet is not on the open shelves, always check the Short Loan Collection! Please be aware that, for reasons of copyright, you are not allowed to photocopy items in the library that are themselves photocopies.

Electronic Journals: Many journals are now available online through the library's home page at: <http://www.bristol.ac.uk/is/library/electronicjournals/>

NB: Some of these materials (those, except journals, without class marks or call numbers) are not available in the University's library. I have included them because they are important to a survey of IR theory.

Historical background reading: If you need a quick introduction to international history, you might want to find the time to read Part One, 'The Historical Context,' in John Baylis and Steve Smith (eds.), The Globalization of World Politics, second edition, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001, pp.35-137.

If you have a bit more time, an excellent introduction to contemporary history is Geoffrey Barraclough, An Introduction to Contemporary History, London: Penguin, 1964 (D421BAR).

SEMINAR SCHEDULE

There are ten 100-minute seminars in the unit (weeks 1-10). Attendance is compulsory. Seminars will provide you with an opportunity to:

- ask questions about things that you don't understand
- engage in the intellectual discussion necessary to sharpening your understanding of these theories and issues
- learn how to apply IR theories to the analysis of contemporary international relations through selected exercises

Week 1: Introduction

In opening of this session I will talk to you about Teaching and Learning, the content of the unit, go through this syllabus with you to ensure that you understand its contents, and allocate oral presentations.

Seminar Topic Why study international relations theory?

Required reading:

Smith, Steve, 'Introduction' [Text]

*Steve Smith and John Baylis 'Introduction' in John Baylis and Steven Smith, The Globalization of World Politics. An Introduction to International Relations, 3rd edition
Course Pack and JZ1305 GLO

Week 2: IR Theory and Method

Seminar Topic How should we study international relations?

Learning outcomes:

At the end of this class, you should be able to explain the difference between 'explaining' and 'understanding', its role in the 'third debate' in International Relations and you will have identified criteria for the assessment of the theories that we will be examining in the coming weeks

Required reading:

Textbook: Milja Kurki and Colin Wight 'International Relations and Social Science' [Text]

Key Work: *Hollis, Martin, and Steve Smith (1990) Explaining and Understanding International Relations, Oxford: Clarendon, Chapter 1, also read Chapters 3 + 4 which are not in the course pack for copy right reasons. Course pack + JX1391 HOL
